

Don't Worry, Darling.

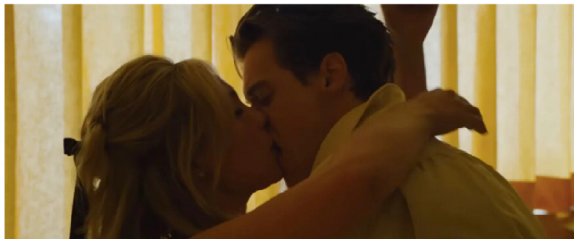

The most perfect prison.

Don't Worry, Darling is a psychological thriller directed by Olivia Wilde in 2022.

The story takes place in "Victory", California. Victory is an isolated city but also a project. The aim is to "change the world", it has everything of a sect.

Alice and Jack Chambers are a happily married couple that follows an ideal 1950's lifestyle just like every inhabitant participating in the project in their headquarter. Every morning the men leave the house to go to their confidential job, abandoning their housewife to take care of their house and / or their child(ren).

Therefore, we can call this reality dystopic because none of the women know that their life, their house, their child aren't real, this is a simulation. Moreover, this also shows the men' desire of domination over their wives by putting them in a simulation they didn't ask for, without their consent.

"It was my life! My life! You don't get to take that away from me!" will scream Alice at Jack's face when she finds out about the truth.

Everything seems "perfect"... Well, things quickly go wrong after that Margaret, one of the housewives, becomes completely mad after losing her child in a forbidden part of the headquarter.

Margaret will try to warn Alice about the reality behind this perfect headquarter before to kill herself in front of her.

After Margaret's death nobody know what happened to her and no one believe Alice. Then, really strange and unnatural things will happen to Alice, after Margaret's suicide, convinced that she's going insane

A romanticized dystopia

The illusion of this perfect lifestyle hides an unglamorous reality. At the end of the movie we discover that since the beginning none of this life is true. Alice lives in a simulation due to a new technology brought by her husband to "make her happier because of how overwhelmed her past life was.

She finds out about it by breaking the rule and go to the forbidden part of the headquarter. There, she finds a futuristic building after an epic car chase against the men who made her look crazy and interned her after her previous try.
